An active lecturer, clinician, conductor, and performer, Mick has recently presented at the NYSSMA Winter Conference in Rochester, New York, adjudicated middle school and high school orchestras in Florida, and published an article in the Florida Music Director magazine. Additionally, he is the past assistant conductor of the Big Bend Community Orchestra and a past double bass section player with the Tallahassee Symphony Orchestra.

Originally a native of Kansas, Mick has taught elementary and middle school orchestra in Texas, and high school orchestra and jazz band in New York. Mick is currently finishing his dissertation on string instrument vibrato at Florida State University where he is completing a PhD in Music Education. Mick holds a Master of Music degree in Music Education from Ithaca College and a Bachelor of Music Education degree from Texas Christian University.

Patrick Valentino

Patrick Valentino is in his first year of the graduate degree in orchestral conducting at Ithaca College. In addition to conducting the IC Sinfonietta, he is assistant conductor for both the Symphony and Chamber Orchestras. Originally from New Jersey, Patrick attended Montclair State University and earned a BMus in Composition summa cum laude. After also studying briefly at the Moscow Conservatory, he moved to Boston to pursue a masters degree in Composition, which he earned from New England Conservatory in 2007. After a few years of working in the Boston area, his desire to more fully pursue conducting led him to Ithaca to study with Jeffery Meyer.

Patrick has conducted ensembles across the country, as well as in Europe and Russia. Most recently he held the post of assistant conductor of the Neponset Valley Philharmonic (MA). His compositions have been performed by groups including the Nashua Symphony, Ariel String Quartet, and Atlas Brass Quintet.

Future projects include conducting a concert with the ICSO in April 2012, and premieres of his work by the Oak Ridge Community Symphony (TN) and the Orchestra Filarmonica Nissena (Sicily).

Hoe-down from Rodeo

Aaron Copland was one of the most prolific American composers of the twentieth century. He is best known for his ballets written in an accessible style such as Appalachian Spring and Billy the Kid.

The ballet Rodeo was choreographed by Agnes de Mille for the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo, and the score was composed by Copland. Rodeo premiered at the Metropolitan Opera house in 1942, and it was an instant success. Hoe Down is the last of our five movements in Rodeo. Hoe Down begins with the American folk tune “Bonaparte’s Retreat”, followed by the Rodeo theme played by the strings. The folk songs “McLeod’s Reel” and “Gilderoy” are then featured by several solo instruments. The Rodeo theme gives way to the climactic kiss between the Cowgirl and the Wrangler, before “Bonaparte’s Retreat” returns for the grand ending, played by the full orchestra.

Capriol Suite

Peter Warlock was a British composer that dabbled in several fields, never establishing a steady career. Born in London in 1894, Warlock studied classics at Oxford University and had very little formal musical training. The composer Frederick Delius was a close friend and huge influence on Warlock, who did a scholarly study of the music of Delius and also wrote a biography of Delius. In addition to composing, Warlock engaged in several short-term occupations, which included working as a music critic, editing a magazine, and editing and transcribing early music manuscripts. His notable compositions include the song cycle ‘The Curlew’, other songs and vocal chamber music, and his most famous work, ‘The Capriol Suite’. “The original piano duet (1925) of the work was a great success and was quickly followed by the version for string orchestra (1926) and a version for full orchestra (1928).

The Capriol Suite is a set of dances in the renaissance style. It was based on tunes found in a manual of Renaissance dances by the French priest Jehan Tabourot. The treatment of the source material is very free and the work can be regarded as an original composition rather than an arrangement. It is a collection of contrasting characteristic dance movements. The first, Basse Danse, is a lively dance for older folk, in which the dancers’ feet for the most part slide along the floor. The second, Pavane, is far more stately in nature, while the following Tordion is once again spirited, similar in mood to the opening movement. The subsequent Pieds en l’air is justifiably the Suite’s most popular movement. While most movements are named after the dance name this one is named after the dancers’ instruction. The dancers’ feet should move so gently that they barely touch the floor. This movement provides a nice oasis of calm before the final movement, Matichins. This is an exhilarating sword dance, danced by four men in pretend combat. The music is march-like throughout, climaxing in violent dissonances which send the piece hurtling to a close.”

L'Arlesienne Suites 1 and 2

George Bizet was invited to compose the incidental music to accompany Alphonse Daudet's play L'Arlesienne, or 'The Girl from Arles'. Bizet composed twenty seven pieces, scored for a small orchestra and a chorus. Unfortunately, the premiere in 1872 was a total flop and the show closed after only twenty one performances. Bizet was urged by fellow musicians who had seen the play to make further use of a quality score.

Bizet arranged four of the larger pieces within the score into an orchestral suite for a symphony orchestra.

Bizet saw one of his only successes during his lifetime when the French Orchestre Pasdeloup premiered L'Arlesienne Suite No. 1 a month after the music's original premiere. After Bizet's death less than three years later, his friend Ernest Guirard arranged additional pieces from Bizet's original music, forming L'Arlesienne Suite No. 2. Today, both suites are credited to Bizet's name because they both use themes and basic orchestration from Bizet's original incidental music. The different movements in the suites depict different scenes and dances from the play.

Symphonie Fantastique, Mvt IV March to the Scaffold

In 1827, while in Paris, Berlioz first noticed Harriet Smithson, a talented Shakespearean actress working at the Odéon theatre. Berlioz became immediately and utterly infatuated with Smithson, and she ultimately became the inspiration for Symphonie Fantastique. This groundbreaking piece established program music, or music that tells a story, as a genre, and solidified Berlioz's reputation as a great Romantic composer.

The piece follows the story of a young artist who meets a woman with whom he falls in unrequited love. The artist's object of affection is represented by the "idée fixe", a musical theme that continues to haunt the artist throughout the piece. In the first three movements, the artist meets and falls for his beloved, sees her at a ball, and dreams about her while resting in the countryside. The story then takes a dark and twisted turn as the artist then has visions of himself getting beheaded for killing his beloved, who then turns up as a witch at his own funeral!

Berlioz described the fourth movement in his original program that was distributed to the audience at the premiere: "Convinced that his love is unappreciated, the artist poisons himself with opium. The dose of narcotic, while too weak to cause his death, plunges him into a heavy sleep accompanied by the strangest of visions. He dreams that he has killed his beloved, that he is condemned, led to the scaffold and is witnessing his own execution. As he cries for forgiveness the effects of the narcotic set in. He wants to hide but he cannot so he watches as an onlooker as he dies. The procession advances to the sound of a march that is sometimes sombre and wild, and sometimes brilliant and solemn, in which a dull sound of heavy footsteps follows without transition the loudest outbursts. At the end of the march, the first four bars of the idée fixe reappear like a final thought of love interrupted by the fatal blow when his head bounced down the steps".
